Hiring Manager,

The Swedish Times,
Stockholm,
Sweden.

Dear Hiring Manager,

As a young and motivated individual, I'm extremely excited to apply for the The Junior Programmer position that has been opened up at The Swedish Times. I'm a graduate who completed my Masters degree in Game Development and Design at the University of Skövde in Sweden, this summer. I come from a computer science background and my skills mainly revolve around programming. Before moving to Sweden to start my master's degree, I worked as an software engineer in a US based company where work mainly focused on providing L3 support and implementing scripts to automate day to day tasks. During my time in Sweden as a Masters student, I got the chance to work remotely as a Gameplay Programmer in 2 game studios where I was able to work together with other members of the team to reach company goals. Furthermore, I also have experience working with web development languages such as HTML, CSS as well as version control technologies such as GIT.

Although I might not have all the necessary qualifications needed for this role, I personally think that with the technological exposure and the previous work experience that I have had will help me learn and adapt to all the technologies that would require for me to work with. I also think that this opportunity would help me further broaden my knowledge in web development and help me gain industry related experience which would be a huge boost to my career. I consider myself as a good team player who can adapt to any given situation and work towards achieving company goals. I strongly believe that working with you all would help me improve as a programmer as well as an individual. To gain a better understanding about my background and qualifications, please review my resume, portfolio website and github account that has been attached. I'm eager to speak with you and greatly appreciate your consideration.

Sincerely,

Rivindu Wickramarachchi
